A captain or military commander in Poland and countries formerly united or subject to it, whence still retained as a title among the Cossacks

Under the suzerainty of the Sultan, the 'hetman of the Cossacks' was a semi independent prince or viceroy His title and authority were at first continued after the acceptance of Russian suzerainty by the Cossacks in 1654, but the power and privileges of the office were gradually curtailed and abolished At present the title 'Hetman (ataman) of all the Cossacks' is an appanage of the Czarevitch, who is represented by a 'hetman by delegation', for each of the territorial divisions Subordinate Cossack chiefs have also the title atamans

High-Churchman. [orig high Churchman A good Churchman, stanch Churchman.]

A Churchman or member of the Church of England holding opinions which give a high place to the authority and claims of the Episcopate and the priesthood, the saving grace of the sacraments, and, generally, to those points of doctrine, discipline, and ritual, by which the Anglican Church is distinguished from the Calvinistic churches of the Continent, and the Protestant Nonconformist churches in England.

a. Originally applied in the 17th and early 18th c. to those who, holding a de jure Episcopacy, opposed x compprehension and toleration of different sects, and strenuously demanded the strict enforcement of the laws against Dissenters, and the passing of such additional measures as the Occasional Conformity Bill. With these were also associated the doctrine of the divine right of kings (of the House of Stuart), and the duty of non-resistance on the part of subjects. The appellation was, in fact, nearly synonymous with Tory, and was at first a hostile nickname, equivalent to the earlier High-flyer, High-flying or High Tory. Churchman (q. v.) in the sense of the Church of England theirs. Low Churchman at began to be accepted as relatively appropriate by the recent times, since 1833, the name has been increasingly appropriated to the adherents of the Oxford Movement led by John Henry Newman, and (after wards) by Edward Bouverie Pusey. The exclusive and partizan styles of these are more or less analogous to the earlier Old High Churchmen, but exhibit (at least in their extreme form) a much closer approximation to those of the pre Reformation Church. b. The name is occasionally applied to those who hold (except as to episcopacy) somewhat analogous opinions in the established Church of Scotland, and perhaps in some other religious communities.

1687 Gd. Advice 43 Against the will of the high Church men. 1704 Reasons Ids May to invote Electors 13 Those parties are more or less analogous to High and Low Church men, a few of em Nonjurants, and all of em Torys. 1704 [C. Leslie] Snake The Wolf Stript by one call'd an High Church man. Ibid. 4, I venture, for it's a Venture at this Time, to own the name of an High Church Man. No man thinks it a Disparagement to be High, that is Zealous in any good Cause. 1705 Hearne Collect. 29 Have they not lately Villanously Divided us with Knavish Distinctions of High, and Low Church Men? 1741–3 Wesley Extracts Journ. (1749) 59 Neither could I have wondered, if the zealous high churchmen had rose, and cut all that were called of Methodists in pieces. 1792 Boswell Johnson I. 8 He was a zealous high-churchman and non-juror, and retained his attachment to the unfortunate house of Stuart. 1835 Hook Ch. Dict., High Churchman . . . This is the nickname given to those who regard the Church, not as the creature and engine of State policy, but as the institution of our Lord. 1890 J. F. Tout Hist. Eng. III. x. vi. 234 The Bennett judgment in 1850 definitely permitted the teaching of the most distinctive doctrine of the new High Churchmen.

1 A natural elevation of the earth's surface rising more or less steeply above the level of the surrounding land Formerly the general term, including what are now called mountains , after the introduction of the latter word, gradually restricted to heights of less elevation , but the discrimination is largely a matter of local usage, and of the more or less mountainous character of the district, heights which in one locality are called mountains being in another reckoned merely as hills A more rounded and less rugged outline is also usually connoted by the name

In Great Britain heights under 2 000 feet are generally called hills , 'mountain being confined to the greater elevations of the Lake District of North Wales and of the Scottish Highlands , but, in India, ranges of 5,000 and even 10,000 feet are commonly called 'hills', in contrast with the Himalaya Mountains, many peaks of which rise beyond 20,000 feet The pl hills is often applied to a region of hills or highland , esp to the highlands of northern and interior India

His (hiz, -iz), poss. pron., 3rd sing. masc. and † neut. [OE. his (hys), genitive of personal pron. HE and hit, IT. The cognate langs. have only the parallel forms without h, Goth. and OS. is, OHG. is, es, in later stages supplanted by the originally reflexive sīn, sein, zīn, zijn. In OE., on the contrary, the refl. possessive sīn was already obsolescent, and usually replaced by his, hire, hira. About the 11th c., the genitive his began, after the earlier analogy of mīn, ðīn, ūre, eower, to be treated as an adj. (with pl. hise, occurring till the 15th c.). Like the other possessive pronouns also, his tended to develop absolute derivative forms, of which hisis, hysen (like hiris, hiren), occur in ME. The former did not take root (see next word), and the latter is only dialectal (see HISN).]

2. Poss. adj. pron. masc. (orig. poss. gen., and then, like L. ejus, often following its sb.). a. Referring to a person. Of or belonging to him, that man's, the male being's; also refl. of or belonging to himself, his own (L. suus).

This includes the simple possessive relation as in 'his money, his lands', the subjective genitive as 'his defence of his doings', and the objective genitive as in 'his defeat, his murder, his murderer'. No special provision exists in the language for the distinction of the latter two, except by context (cf. 'his dismissal of the envoys was blamed: he received his (own) dismissal soon after'), but in some cases the objective genitive is expressed periphrastically by of him (e.g. 'his defence, I mean your defence of him, was well conducted'). But the periphrastic form occurs also for the possessive genitive, as 'for the life of him'.

3. Referring to neuter nouns or things inanimate.

Here are to be distinguished four groups. a. Names of inanimate things of masculine gender in OE. b. Nouns of neuter gender in OE. Both these had his in OE., resulting in ME. in a general use of his (c) for all names of inanimate things, exc. in those instances where her was used, either traditionally from OE., or under the influence of translation (the sb. being fem. in Latin, etc.), or by personification. In this use, his was often exchanged for thereof in 16th c., and was gradually superseded by ITS from c 1600 onwards, though the historical his lingered in some writers till late in the 17th c. d. In modern use, esp. since 1700, the use of his with things implies personification.

4. After a sb., used instead of the genitive inflexion. Cf. the similar use of HER, THEIR. Chiefly with proper nouns, but also with others.

Found already in OE., but most prevalent from c 1400 to 1750; sometimes identified with the genitive inflexion -es, -is, -ys, esp. in 16–17th c., when it was chiefly (but not exclusively) used with names ending in -s, or when the inflexional genitive would have been awkward. Archaically retained in Book keeping and for some other technical purposes.

His (hiz), absolute poss. pron. [The 3rd pers. sing. masc. member of the series mine, thine, his, hers, its, ours, yours, theirs, formed or differentiated in various ways from the adjective possessives my, thy, his, her, its, our, your, their. In OE. and early ME., no such distinction existed; the simple possessive prons. mīn, þīn, ūre, ēower, and the genitive cases hir, hire, hira (with ME. þeȝȝre) were used in both constructions. The differentiation app. began about 1300, but was not complete till much later. In mīn, þīn (mine, thine) the original forms remained when used absolutely; when followed by a sb., they were gradually reduced to mi, thi, now my, thy. In her, our, your, their, an absolute pron. was formed by the addition of -is, -es, -s, -s (see HERS, etc.). In his, which already ended in s, although a form HISIS was tried in ME., the additional -is, -es, -'s, did not take root, and the absolute his (= le sien, il suo, der seinige), (although it may perhaps be considered as standing for his's, his', as in possessives like Jesus', Moses'), remains identical in form with the simple or adjective possessive. The more recent its, also ending in s, has followed the example of his. For another type of the absolute pronoun see HISN.]

The second Tuesday after Easter Sunday, Hock Tuesday in former times an important term day, on which rents were paid, and the like, Hock day and Michaelmas dividing the rural year into its summer and winter halves It was also, from the 14th c, and probably earlier, a popular festival, signalized by the collection of money for parish purposes by roughly humorous methods see HOCK-TIDE, HOCK-MONEY The plural, hock days, includes also the preceding day, Hock Monday, which was similarly celebrated

The date is sometimes given as the second Monday and Tuesday after Easter etc this appears to originate in different ways of reckoning the quindena Paschæ as the fortnight following Easter, or the two weeks before and after Easter Statements going back to the 15th or 16th c assert that Hock-day commenced earlier the measure of the Danes on 13 Nov 1002, or the death of Hardiknut on 8 June, 1042 From the dates of these events it is difficult to understand how either was associated with Hock tide]

Hog (hŏg), *sb*1 Also 4(7)–6 hogge, 6–9 hogg (hogh-, hoh-, hough-) [? Also 4 hoh, but the derivative Hoggester occurs c 1175 origin unknown

The word may possibly be contained in the OF place names Hogastan (Hogston) and Hocsetwatle, but this is hardly likely, and it is doubtful whether ME hog represented Cornish hoch, Welsh hoch, swine, is improbable on phonetic and other grounds The evidence afforded by the word itself and by its derivatives hoggaster, hoggish, hoggerel (the first of which, applied to sheep, offers our earliest example of the word group), makes it probable that the word stood in close reference to the age or condition of the animal, rather than to either pig or sheep distinctively Hence some have thought hog possibly related to Hack v, with the notion of castration But the notion of castration runs through most of the uses of *sb*1, 4, 5 & 13 b In this uncertainty, the order of senses followed is merely one of practical convenience

I 1 A swine reared for slaughter, spec a castrated male swine, a barrow-pig or barrow-hog (see Barrow *sb*2 1 b), hence, a domestic swine generally (Not used in Scotland)

The original application may either refer to the age, swine in the first purpose of slaughter being seldom allowed to exceed much more than one year in age, or to the fact that the male intended for this purpose are usually castrated see 6 in note)

Of this Godefroy cites any dialect variants and by forms, as aane, aguillanne, uillonen, aguilanle, haguilenef, haguilenen, haguenon, etc.; in mod Fr dialects it survives as aguilanneu in Aunis, guilanneau, in Normandy haguignettes, haguignettes, in Guernsey hagonnon, it is found in 9th before then aguilanles, now aguilanles, hainbel, Christmas, of which spouts examples are given by Godefroy of the phrases demander l'aguillanneuf, 'donner l'aguilanneu, 'porter flanis qui demandoient aguillenles pour le feu de Caresme iller querant aguillennen le dernier jour de decembre,', nsme jeunes gens ont accoutumé à faire pour querir leur illenles', which require only to be translated, with the bstitution of hogmanay to be vernacular be expressions. lthough the phonetic difference between aguillanneuf and e Sc. word is great, the form in hogm- between hogmanay n oser to hagmané, hogmanay, and it cannot be doubted at both the custom and the term are from the French The French term is explained by Cotgrave, 1611, as wargn au nuef ["o the mistletoe the new year"] the voyce of mistry people begging small presents, or new yeares-gifts, Christmas an ancient name of rejoycing, derived from e Druides, who were woont, the first of Januarie, to goe to the woods, where hauing searched they gathered (selesow', etc.) And according to Scotcher's 16 (1611 edn. 109): 'With us (in Beauce) people go on new year's day to eir relatives' and friends' houses, to solicit gifts, vulgarly alled Aguelanels, pour le gay l'an neuf (for the mistletoe le new year), for that on this day they distribute mistletoe e handsel and as a form of good augury' But these exanations, with the reference to the gui or mistletoe, are ow rejected by French scholars as merely 'popular etymology' The alleged Fr cry 'An gui menez, tirez les, mais du blanc et point du bis', cited second hand in unreson, is not to be found in the French author from hom it professes to be quoted, and appears to be a fragment schubert's (Romania IV. 253) suggests that Sp aguilando, aguilanlet, guilanil, etc, are corruptions of L calendæ, also Koerting Lateinisch romanisches Wbch. art 3941

Homophene (hɒ·mofin) [irreg f HOMO- + Gr φαίνειν to show, to appear (The Gr formation would be ὁμοφανής, giving Eng homophane)] A word having the same form to the eye as another, used esp. in reference to the reading of deaf-mutes who recognize words only by sight Hence Homophe nous (more correctly -phanous), a

1883 A. BELL in Ann. Deaf & Dumb (1884) Jan. 44 Homophenous words, or words that have the same appearance to the eye. Ibid. 59 A knowledge of homophenes that is of those words that present the same appearance to the eye. 1884 A. J. ELLIS in Trans. Philol. Soc. 1882-4 The word homophene is usually appearing, on the model of homophone, and I formerly used it, but suggested to Prof. Graham Bell some years ago by Mr. Homer, late Principal of the Providence (Rhode Island) School for Deaf Mutes, and has since been generally adopted Ibid. Hence every word in the sentence is homophenous with the correspondent word in the list

1879 GROVE Dict. Mus. I. 746 Homophone voices or instruments sounding alike—unison passages equaled in music written in what was formerly called the Monodic style now ordinarily employed for music in plain harmony as opposed to the Polyphonic or strict

Homophonic (hɒmofo·nik), a Mus [f as prec + -IC.] 1 Producing, or consisting of, sounds of the same pitch, unisonous, in unison Said of ancient music, opp to antiphonic

Ho moplasmy = HOMOTAXIS

1874 R. BROWN Mem. Bot. 158 Cases of homoplasmy in plants are referable to two distinct classes, resemblances in general habit, and resemblances of particular organs

Homoplast (hɒ·mŏplæst) Biol [f as prec + Gr πλαστός moulded] cf bioplast]

1 An organ or part homoplastic with another (see next), opp to HOMOGEN 2

1870 RAY LANKESTER in Ann. Nat. Hist. VI. 39 Such details of agreement we must set down to the fact that they are to a great degree homoplasts, similar forces or requirements operating on similar materials in the two stocks having produced results in the way of structure which have a certain agreement

2 An aggregate or division of plastids all of the same structure opp to alloplast

1883 [see homogeneous 5 b HOMO]

Homoplastic (-plæ·stik), a Biol [f as prec + Gr πλαστικός fit for moulding] Having a similarity of structure without community of origin said of parts or organs of different animals or plants Opp to HOMOGENETIC

Nearly synonymous with HOMOMORPHIC c, and with ANALOGOUS 2 b; but implying that the similarities are due to similarity of environment

1870 RAY LANKESTER in Ann. Nat. Hist. VI. 40 The right ventricle of the bird's heart is not homogenous with the left ventricle of the mammal's heart, but is with the left but the two cavities in each case are homoplastic 1872 DARWIN Origin Spec. (ed. 6) xiv. 386 Homoplastic structures are the same with those which have classed as analogous modifications or resemblances

Homoplastide (-plæ·stid) Biol [f as prec + Gr πλαστός moulded + IDE.] An organism consisting of a number of cells all of the same kind Opp to heteroplastide and monoplastide

1889 VINES in Nature 24 Oct. 624 The body of multicellular organisms (monoplastides), as also that of undifferentiated multicellular organisms (homoplastides) Ibid. 622 [see HETEROPLASTIDE]

Homoplasy (hɒmp·plăsi) *Biol [f as prec + Gr -πλασία, f πλάσις moulding, formation] Homoplastic condition, similarity of structure produced independently by the operation of similar external circumstances Opp to HOMOGENY 2

1870 RAY LANKESTER in Ann. Nat. Hist. VI. 39 When identical or nearly similar forces or environments act on two or more parts of an organism which are exactly or nearly alike [or] parts in two organisms which parts are exactly or nearly alike and sometimes homogenetic, the resulting correspondences called forth in the several parts in the two organisms will be nearly or exactly alike I propose to call this kind of agreement homoplasy or homoplasy Ibid. 40 What, exactly, is to be ascribed to homogeny, and what to homoplasy, in the relations of this series of structures, is a matter for careful consideration 1886 Nat. Sci. 161, Homoplasy, the assumption by organisms of externally similar forms when exposed to similar external conditions. A good example is seen in the similarity of the American aloe, which is an Agave, to the true aloe

Homopter (hɒ·mŏptĕr), sb pl Entom [mod L. (Latreille 1817), f Gr ὁμο- HOMO- + πτερόν wing cf Gr ὁμόπτερος with the same plumage] A suborder of HEMIPTERA, comprising insects of very various forms, with wings of uniform texture contrasted with HETEROPTERA

1826 KIRBY & SP. Entomol. xlvii (1828) II. 385 He denominated the last of these orders Homoptera. 1835 KIRBY Hab. & Inst. Animals II. xx. 319 The Homoptera have four dissilked wings often of a substance between coriaceous and membranous 1874 LUBBOCK Orig. & Met. I. v. 125 The Homoptera agree with the Heteroptera in the structure of the mouth, and in the metamorphoses

Hence Homo pter [f homopter, f atreille] Homo pteran, a member of the Homoptera Homo pterous a, belonging to or having the characters of the Homoptera

1826 KIRBY & SP. Entomol. xlvii (1828) IV. 385 Very considerable differences take place in the economy of Homopterous insects 1842 BRANDE Dict. Sci. etc., Homoptera, Homopterans, the name of an order of insects, distinguished from the Heteroptera of Latreille by including those in which the wing covers are of an uniform semimembranous consistency 1864 WEBSTER, Homopter

Homostyled (hɒ·mostȳld), a Bot [f HOMOSTYLE + -ED².] Having the styles or pistils in different individual plants of the same length relatively to the stamens (= HOMOGONOUS 1, HOMOMORPHIC b) opp to heterostyled Also Homostylic (hɒmostī·lik), Homostylous (-stəi·lŏs), adjs in same sense, Homostyly (hɒ·mostăili), the condition of being homostyled

Homotaxeous (ˌhɒmə(ʊ)tˈaksɪəs), a Geol [f HOMO- + Gr -τάξια (f τάξις) arrangement + -AL] Applied to strata in different regions, having the same relative position with respect to those underlying and overlying them, but not necessarily contemporaneous cf HOMOTAXIS, also to the fossil remains (usually of similar character) found in such strata

1870 HUXLEY Anniv Addr Geol Soc in Q Jrnl XXVI p xlii, Certain forms of life in one locality occur in the same general order of succession as, or are homotaxial with, similar forms in the other locality 1888 J PRESTWICH Geol II 4 The homotaxial relations of the groups

Hence Homota xially adv, in the way of or in relation to homotaxy Also Homota xeous, Homota xic adjs = HOMOTAXIAL

1866 Intell Observ No 56 97 As homotaxeous, and not as contemporaneous 1872 NICHOLSON Palæont (1879) I 44 The Silurian rocks of Europe North America, South America, Australia, &c, contain very similar fossils, and are undoubtedly 'homotaxeous' 1877 HUXLEY Anat Invert 1702 28 The species which constitute the corresponding or homotaxic terms in the series in different localities, are not identical 1880 DAWKINS Early Man 22 note, If we look at them, homotaxially, from the point of view offered by the European Miocene, they are Meiocene.

Homotaxis (ɛtɛksɪs) Geol [irreg f Gr ὁμο- HOMO- + τάξις arrangement The Gr formation would be ὁμοταξία* homotaxy] The conception of being homotaxial, the relation of strata having the same relative position in the geological series, or of the similar forms of life occurring in such strata

1862 HUXLEY Anniv Addr Geol Soc in Q Jrnl XVIII p xlii, For Geology (which after all is only the anatomy and physiology of the earth) it might be well to invent some single word (such as 'homotaxis', similarity of order), in order to express an essentially similar idea (as to homology in anatomy) Ibid p xlvi, The mischief of confounding that 'homotaxis' or 'similarity of arrangement' which can be demonstrated, with 'synchrony or identity of date, for which there is not a shadow of a proof, under the one common term of 'contemporaneity' 1870 Ibid XXVI p xliii The use of the term 'homotaxis' instead of 'succession' has not, so far as I know, found much favour in the eyes of geologists 1883 Nature 18 Jan 262 It cautions the student against the confusion of geological synchrony with stratigraphical homotaxis

1829 P CUNDALL Richard's Flem Bot (ed 4) 398 The embryo is said to be homotropous when it has the same direction with the seed, that is to say, when its radicle corresponds to the hilum 1870 BENTLEY Bot (ed 2) 342 The embryo is said to be erect or homotropous

Homotype (hɒˌmōtaip) Biol [f Gr ὁμο- HOMO- + TYPE] A part or organ having the same type of structure as another, a homologue, applied esp to serially or laterally homologous parts in the same organism

1840 J A G BALFOUR Typ Char Nat (1860) 64 A general likeness is sufficient in nature to constitute in the eyes of naturalists a type, and hence they speak of such as homologies or homotypes. 1849 OWEN Nat Limbs 19 The former, the homotype of the fore-limb 1857 Mod & Teeth in Circ Sc, Organic Nat I 170 So far as each segment is a repetition or homotype of every other segment 1878 MIVART Elem Anat 224 The successive vertebræ are serial homologues, or homotypes
